Don't worry if you missed any of this year's competition, Strauss Illustrated provides an in depth analysis of the biggest sport to ever hit the Hasidic side of Queens.

The Mindset of Monty Python

Between rations, war, and English women, the Monty Python troupe had every reason to be cynical. Lucky for us, they delighted in a silliness that still brings a joy to millions to this day.

Monty Python's members were born during the height of World War II, a war that included the world. They grew up in a bleak post-war Britain, which was about as gray and dull as a well done steak from Denny's. Eric Idle, for example, was raised poor with a single mother and went to a boarding school that was "a physically abusive, bullying, harsh environment for a kid to grow up in". Even worse, Terry Jones was born in Wales. While the world around them seemed worse than a blowjob from Dracula, Monty Python used a shared sense of optimism to find greater success than Nicolas Sarkozy's penis.

The troupe's first major breakthrough was with Monty Python Flying Circus, a BBC sketch show that proved stupidity could be a skill. The show included everything from an 8 minute bit about the Spanish Inquisition to a 24 second video of Cleese slapping Palin with a fish. The series, much like The League of Nations, made everyone laugh both then and now.

The group then branched into the world of film with Monty Python and the Holy Grail. The Holy Grail was about King Arthur and the Knights of the Round Table searching for the famed Christian chalice. The film perfectly captures the Python's satirical comedy, their bit about the bubonic plague killing as hard as the actual disease.

Creating something better than The Grail was like trying not to get chlamydia in Tallahassee, but somehow they found that one disease free FSU student with The Life of Brian. The Life of Brian was a parody of the story of Jesus Christ, centering around a man who everyone thought was the messiah. Brian was actually, in fact, just a normal guy who wanted to be left alone. It was the first film that touched on the absurd side of the Church, which is ironic since the church touched pretty much everyone it could. The iconic ending was classic Python, finding absurdity in even the darkest of moments with Brian and the other "blasphemers" hanging from crosses and singing Eric Idle's award winning song "Always Look on the Bright Side of Life".

At the end of the day, Monty Python grew up in an

A painter's rendition of the infamous Fish Slapping Dance from the BBC sketch show Monty Python Flying Circus. The sketch finished in 24 seconds more commonly referred to as 3 Chris Gula climaxes.

Several characters sing Always Look On The Bright Side Of Life as they hang from crosses at the end of The Life of Brian. Fun fact, Jesus' crucifixion was the first time the phrase "hang in there" was used.

era that told them life was bleak. They started creating comedy in a time that was rigid, intense and dark. In the face of that shitty lifestyle, they all got together and decided they wanted to laugh. That attitude led to the groundbreaking decisions that changed comedy, upending rules around topics, styles, and even structure that everyone had followed religiously. The only real rule on the Flying Circus was that sketches lasted as long as they were funny. It didn't matter if there was no classic ending or proper structure, if the group thought something wasn't enjoyable or funny anymore they would simply say "and now, for something completely different". They got into comedy to have fun, if they weren't laughing then why keep doing it?

That's one of the attitudes that I think is missing in comedy these days. So many people make themselves miserable trying to make what they think other people want. Instead of having fun they torture themselves. That's why I love writing Strauss Illustrated. I get to make jokes and stories the way I want them, only structured to make me and (hopefully) my friends smile and laugh. If somethings boring or dull then fuck it, I just take it out and move on. If the magazine leads to some incredible opportunity down the road then that's awesome, but for now it's just the Flying Circus - something to make my friends and I smile and laugh.

And now, for something completely different.

BLITZEN ARRESTED!

Strauss Illustrated's tabloid "TMS" has the inside scoop on the booger sugar buck's big arrest

Blitzen "The White Nosed Reindeer" was arrested this past weekend in Miami Beach, where he was found on the roof of The Mutiny Hotel with 7 unidentified flying does and over 12 bricks of pure Colombian cocaine.

As a North Pole citizen, Blitzen doesn't qualify for the American Constitution or the Bill of Rights. As a reindeer, Blitzen doesn't even qualify for the United Nation's Human Rights. As such, interrogators were allowed to use unspeakable methods of torture to extract information from the Boreal Buck. This allegedly consisted of stress positions, waterboarding, and 7 days worth of Friends reruns. On the 8th day of Schwimmer and schmucks, Blitzen cracked and revealed he had a hoof in an intricate drug ring extending from the North Pole all the way down to Argentina. As the "mule" of the operation (please remember, Blitzen is a reindeer, not an actual mule; mule is simply a term for an individual who smuggles contraband across borders), Blitzen would sneak out of the North Pole stables and collect baggies of "Southern Snow" from the cartel handlers. He would then return to the pole and slip the drugs to paid off elves, who would stuff the "White Christmas" into adorable little teddy bears. These would then be unknowingly delivered to the homes of the buyers by none other than Saint Nick, putting the bears under the trees himself. By flying the drugs through the Christmas sky, Blitzen was able to evade the DEA and move the "candy (co)canes" completely undetected.

When asked for comment,

The now defunct reindeer made famous by songs like "Rudolph the Red Nosed Reindeer", "(Blitzen On) The Dock Of The Bay" and the "Blitzenkrieg Bop" was processed in the Miami Beach Police Department this past week with remnants of his night still visible on his snout.

Santa's personal spokesperson Michael Buble stated "Santa had absolutely zero knowledge of Blitzen's drug use or associations. Blitzen's performance as been stellar, and his actions have never indicated that illegal drugs or activity could possibly be in play. Blitzen's actions do not reflect the culture that Santa and his associates have worked hard to create, and Blitzen's place among the "Great 8" reindeer that pull Santa's sleigh is currently being re-evaluated. For the time being, Blitzen is on stable-arrest while Dasher has been promoted to lead left gangline. Also, all Teddy Bears in Santa's sack have been removed for immediate inspection".

Due to Blitzen's ability to literally fly away, his bail has been set at 2 million glasses of milk.

CELEBRITY GINGERBREAD HOUSES

Home & Strauss Television invited celebrities to the annual gingerbread competition, see the creations below!

BOBBY BONILLA

Even though he hasn't played since 2001, Bonilla still receives $1.17 million a year from the New York Mets. Upon retiring, Bonilla helped start electric car company Tesla, which co-founder and possible human Elon Musk dickishly pushed him out of in 2007. With the hush money he received and his annual payout from the Mets, Bobby lives in a home very similar to his impressive cookie castle above.

GARY BUSEY

Now this one's a bit surprising. We provided Mr. Busey with gingerbread and aren't really sure where he found graham crackers, but with all the different things he could've done we'll call this one a win. Mr. Busey originally intended to build a house of cards style structure out of the graham crackers and icing, but unfortunately had to stop short after somehow lighting the kitchen on fire.

MITT ROMNEY

What can be said about Mitt Romney that hasn't already been said about plain Greek yogurt. Sure he's good for you, but you're never really excited by him. You always think maybe if you give him one more shot you'll like him, but it never really quite works out. Unsurprisingly, Mitt's gingerbread house is the most Mittiest creation possible: bland, unexciting, and excessively average.

CHARLES BARKLEY

Sir Charles' donut shop gives a uniquely diabetic flair to an already unhealthy activity. It should be noted that Charles originally built an entire gingerbread strip mall, but started to get hungry when he finished parking structure 7. Oddly enough he chose to eat all the gingerbread stores that didn't have to do with food, starting with the Bob's Discount Furniture and throwing up after the Sunglass Hut.

FREDDY KRUEGER

Insomnia plagues millions across the world. One unfortunate person in particular has even lost his job. Now that no one is sleeping, Freddy Krueger has no dreams to haunt and torture. He ruined a few lives in the month of October that he couldn't meet his Delta Airlines quota. Now, Freddy can't make rent on his 200 sq ft Gary Indiana house, and was clearly thinking about it during the competition.

LORD FARQUAAD

Long criticized for his cruel torturing of "Gingie" the gingerbread man, Lord Farquaad's ghost is attempting to clear his name and gain entrance to heaven...by showing why Gingie deserved to be tortured. His Majesty created the above war-zone depiction to portray Gingie as a cookiezilla, who would have further harmed other cookies until Lord Farquaad intervened.

Santa Goes Green

by Stral Gore

In perhaps the biggest Christmas development since pasteurized milk, coal will no longer be used as a punishment for naughty Christian boys and girls. The Noel news comes as a shock to many, as Santa was quoted just 2 months ago saying he "would never change the punishment. It's that simple. NEVER - you can use caps." Well, it looks like never, much like Odell Beckham at a sewage treatment plant, came early.

Climate change activists and fun people alike have lauded the change, hailing Saint Nick as a hero in the fight against global warming. In what should have been a proud moment, the only man with memberships to both the Christian Order of Saints and Diabetics Anonymous actually scooped himself by saying he was "just doing [his] part in keeping the North Pole white". While many assume he was referring to the snow covering the arctic circle, black and Latino elves such as Kyler Murray and Bruno Mars have voiced their outrage over what they call "carelessly racist remarks". The controversial statement is just the latest in a string of PR nightmares for the famous fat man, the worst being what many believe to be the real reason for the move away from coal.

Due to the growing global population and number of naughty children, the amount of coal flowing through Santa's factories has risen faster than Mel Gibson's pants while watching Schindler's List. As a result, elves have started showing signs of coal workers pneumoconiosis, more commonly known as the "black lung" (or "pulmon negro" for our Spanish reader). Peter Dinklage, president of Elves Against Santa's Preposterous Operation Ruining The Snow (or "EA SPORTS" for short) led a strike outside Santa's pole-side penthouse (yes, I realize that using a real life dwarf in an elf joke is low hanging fruit (yes, I also realize that a "low hanging fruit" joke about a dwarf is also, in and of itself, low hanging fruit)). The strike featured catchy chants such as "You fly while we die" and "Santa you're a cunt". It lasted 8 days and nights, a hint at the longstanding threat that the elves would convert to Judaism if their demands were not met in full.

Then, one stormy Wednesday eve, Santa caved and yelled; "Oh elves, I give up the fight, please get back to work tonight". Then all the elves went back in, with a cheer of victory, sitting again at their posts, in the shithole factory (end music).

Singing aside, the new change is set to begin immediately with replacement punishments being considered. Top contenders are 100% bruised bananas, gift cards to Long John Silvers, and DVD copies of Trolls 2.

WORLD SERIES OF DREIDEL

By Strausslom Aleichem

Strauss Illustrated has the inside scoop on the competition that Emmitt Smith once called "not even an activity". Over the next 3 pages you'll find a review of the series, action shots of a few key moments and a stage by stage commentary capturing every detail of the most important spins

The World Series of Dreidel (WSOD) competition in Queens NY came to a close this past Sunday after 5 days of grueling play and one highly uncomfortable Shabbat dinner.

The group stage of the competition officially kicked off at sundown the Monday after Yom Kippur, everyone having cleansed themselves of their sins before arriving in the Big Apple. Groups I and II played on day 1, quickly adding new sins to their rap sheets with 3 fights, 2 ejections and one slightly uncomfortable comment about gay marriage. One fight in particular (an unathletic slap battle between Larry David and Jason Alexander) had to be broken up by security, the two bald bastards being sent to the penalty box (or "Shmuck Shack") for 15 minutes a piece. Larry was subsequently ejected, winning many spectators money as this was the most common prop bet of the week. Sinning aside, Monday saw WSOD's highest ratings in the modern era with just over 1800 viewers, 37 of whom were not bribed or threatened (an all time record). This was good for 11th best program on ESPN 8 the best finish WSOD has ever had in a single day.

Although the remainder of group play saw a 100% decrease in fights, it did see a 300% increase in viewers. The only man to go to both the MLB All-Star Game and WSOD Tournament of Mensch's Sandy Koufax did not see the success he is so used to having, leaving after just 30 minutes in a huge upset during day number 2. As competition kicked off following the 11:00 AM Shvitz, Koufax lost to newcomer Amar'e Stoudemire in just 3 quick spins. Koufax told Strauss Illustrated Sports Reporter Tai-Kwon-Doe Strauss that he "always has trouble when he's behind", a trait that has plagued him in the dreidel pit, baseball diamond and the bedroom.

After the first 4 days of play, the first place finishers from each group moved on to the two semifinal rounds played on Friday. The semifinals were run simultaneously and featured one of the strangest moments in WSOD history when one particularly erratic spin from Billy Joel hit the side of the pit at just the right angle and flew across onto the other semifinal's table. Al Franken had just set his Dreidel loose, and the two Talmudic tops slammed into each other with the ferocity of 10,000 Davids. Both dreidels landed on Gimmel, giving The Piano Man the first ever assist in WSOD history. As the semifinals rolled on and sunset approached, many worried that the competition would have to be postponed until after the sabbath on Saturday. In what many view as the biggest miracle since rogaïne coated yarmulkes, Prince Charles spun a Gimmel at 5:45 PM and ended the day's competition just in time.

With the day off on Saturday, the four finalists (the top two finishers from each of the semifinals) were able to relax their weary, hairy fingers and explore the surrounding area. Unfortunately for them, they received the true Queens experience. Julia Louis-Dreyfus was spat on for wearing a Lakers shirt, Prince Charles was kicked out of a local coffee shop because "America", and Al Franken had a street-fight with 7 Hasidic teenagers at a nearby deli over the last piece of rugelach. Stoudemire was the only finalist who knew how to have a good time in Queens, which is to walk to the nearest subway and take the train into Manhattan. He then partied with current New York superstars until the Jets players arrived, at which time everyone sighed and went home.

The finalists arrived Sunday morning for the most anticipated sports finale in recent Jewish history, ready to stake their claims for the coveted $7 grand prize. The final table: Stoudemire, Louis-Dreyfus, Prince Charles and Al Franken. The morning was far from all smiles, however, as 3 sponsors had dropped out over allegations that Dreidel commissioner Maury Povitch had eaten bacon with his breakfast. The great "kosher Conundrum" led to an emergency bidding for replacement sponsors, resulting in startup tea company Ekon Tea and human milk company GOAT Milk winning the not at all coveted advertising spaces.

When the dreidels had all settled, Former New York Knick and current New York Jew Amar'e Stoudemire was crowned winner and awarded the coveted title of "Master Dreideler". He is by far the tallest, heaviest and darkest champion in WSOD history, and will almost certainly keep that title until overpopulation and global warming kills us all.

Larry David giving the Seinfeld group a last look of contempt before he stormed out following his ejection

CONFERENCE X GROUP STAGE

Group I - Musicians

1. Billy Joel
2. Lenny Kravitz
3. P!nk
4. Bob Dylan

Group II - Seinfeld Cast/Crew

1. Julia Louis-Dreyfus
2. Jerry Seinfeld
3. Jason Alexander
4. Larry David (Disqualified)

Group III - Movie Stars

1. Adam Sandler
2. Maury Ballstein
3. Jeff Goldblum
4. Scarlett Johansson

Group IV - Athletes

1. Amar'e Stoudemire
2. Sandy Koufax
3. Goldberg (Mighty Ducks)
4. No other qualifiers

Conference X highlights: Lenny "say hei kid" Kravitz's bid for a second WSOD anklet came to an early end after he saw more nuns than a lesbian schoolgirl porn. Amar'e Stoudemire had the second longest Gimmel streak (12) in the modern era, second only to Bruce Springsteen's legendary run of 37 back in 1994. Fan favorite Adam Sandler went full Happy Gilmore after winning his division, air humping the table and Mr. Jeff Goldblum. In the Seinfeld group, former champion Larry David was well on his way to a 32nd consecutive semifinal when he was unfortunately ejected for yelling at an official over the comfort level of the seats. In his place, Julia Louis-Dreyfus managed a win and will move on to the next round.

CONFERENCE X SEMIFINALS

1. Amar'e Stoudemire (Sports Champion)
2. Julia Louis-Dreyfus (Seinfeld Champion)
3. Billy Joel (Music Champion)
4. Adam Sandler (Film Champion)

Conference X Semifinals Highlights: Billy Joel's New York State of Mind must have been focused on Staten Island this year, as his performance was absolute trash. Adam Sandler channeled his inner Billy Madison and was awarded no points throughout the game, while Julia Louis-Dreyfus apparently was still in Veep mode and ended her night as the second best. That of course means that Amar'e "Meshuggeneh Mamba" Stoudemire claimed the top spot in the Alef conference, heading to the championship round as the overall 2 seed.

CONFERENCE 2 GROUP STAGE

Group V - Politicians

1. Al Franken
2. Benjamin Netanyahu
3. Chuck Shumer
4. Dianne Feinstein

Group VI - Businesspeople

1. Mark Zuckerberg
2. Larry Ellison
3. Michael Dell
4. Mr. Krabs

Group VII - Dicks

1. Dan Snyder
2. Martin Shkreli
3. Michael Cohen
4. Bernie Madoff

Group VIII - Goyim

1. Prince Charles
2. Mary Kate Olsen
3. Terry Bradshaw
4. The Ghost of Franz Ferdinand

Conference 2 highlights: Al Franken made quick work of the politician group, forcing Netanyahu from the table faster than he could say "annex the west bank". Owner of The Washington Football Team and man who calls interns "the help" Dan Snyder won the Dicks Group in fitting fashion, framing all three opponents for tax fraud and being awarded the championship uncontested. In the fan favorite Goyim (non-Jewish) division, Prince Charles shocked the Yiddish speaking world by beating 4 time Superbowl and 11 time Pittsburgh dreidel champion Terry Bradshaw on the final spin of the match. Finally, Mark Zuckerberg won the businesspeople division and celebrated with a glass of Indonesian tears.

CONFERENCE 2 SEMIFINALS

1. Prince Charles (Goyim Champion)
2. Al Franken (Politics Champion)
3. Mark Zuckerberg (Business Champion)
4. Dan Snyder, the piece of shit (Dicks Champion)

Conference 2 Semifinals Highlights: With one of the most dominating performances in WSOD history, Prince Charles looked like the Britain of old and took everybody else's money. The Anglican Aristocrat took out Dan Snyder (to raucous applause) and Mark Zuckerberg (to a standing ovation) in a single gimmel. Later he used the little seen spinny spinny quad flip turn technique to finish off former SNL writer and generic police sketch of a sex offender Al Franken, moving on to the final as the overall number 1 seed.

2020 WSOD FINAL TABLE

1. Amar'e Stoudemire (Champion)
2. Julia Louis-Dreyfus
3. Prince Charles (Medical Forfeit)
4. Al Franken

Final Table highlights: The final table offered more excitement than a bar mitzvah in Tehran with 67 all-ins, 3 illegal spins and 1 medical forfeit. The top seeds (Stoudemire and Prince Charles) were neck and wrinkly neck throughout most of the match, until Prince Charles attempted the first reverse latka flip since the 1947 West Germany classic. Seconds after releasing the dreidel, the Prince of Wales fainted and collapsed onto the ground. The resulting gimmel eliminated an all in Al Franken, while the British monarch forfeited as by leaving for the hospital. Stoudemire and Louis-Dreyfus then battled furiously until commissioner Povitch signaled the end of regulation with a blew of he shofar. The players launched into the sudden victory round after a brief intermission of pastrami and manischewitz, with Louis-Dreyfus (much like Seinfeld itself) exiting early in a somewhat disappointing fashion. Stoudemire gave Louis-Dreyfus the final gimmel to the gut just 3 turns into sudden victory, claiming the anklet and winning the series.
